Summary:

Born at the stroke of noon on October 4, the female calf is Kuwari's second offspring

Detailed analysis:

The naming of a newborn elephant calf in Kaziranga National Park highlights the continued success of India's flagship wildlife conservation program. For government exam aspirants, this incident underscores several key topics: (1) Biodiversity conservation – Kaziranga is a UNESCO World Heritage Site famed for its rhinos, elephants, and tigers. (2) Species recovery – the birth of a second calf to a known mother indicates stable or improving herd dynamics, a metric used in wildlife monitoring. (3) Human-wildlife interface – naming the calf after popular singer Zubeen Garg creates public empathy, which can translate into stronger community support for protected-area policies. (4) Legislative framework – the incident reflects the implementation of the Wildlife Protection Act, 1972, and the role of state forest departments in breeding programmes. Candidates should note how such events can be linked to questions on habitat preservation, legal safeguards, and the socio-cultural strategies employed to promote conservation.
