Image 2 (Pexels):

Summary:

Villagers from Balda and Banur villages allege that Kalinga Alumina Limited, an Adani subsidiary, the panchayat, and district officials colluded to forge the signatures of dead, injured, and absent people on resolutions that consented to the mining.

Detailed analysis:

The article highlights illegal land-use conversion and alleged forgery of Gram Sabha resolutions to facilitate bauxite mining. For UPSC and other government exams, it illustrates (1) the procedural safeguards under the Forest (Conservation) Act and the role of Gram Sabhas in forest clearance, (2) the importance of environmental impact assessments, (3) potential violations of the Right to a Healthy Environment and the Public Trust Doctrine, and (4) the political economy of large-scale mining projects involving corporate-state collusion. Candidates should note how such cases influence policy debates on sustainable mining, community rights, and enforcement of the Forest Rights Act.

Image 2 (Pexels):

Summary:

The birds have been raised at a conservation centre on Sado Island following a successful captive-breeding program and ten more birds are waiting to be released.

Detailed analysis:

This story underscores successful ex-situ conservation and species re-introduction, a key topic for the Environment and Biodiversity sections of competitive exams. It demonstrates (1) the role of captive-breeding in preventing extinction, (2) the importance of habitat restoration before release, (3) international collaboration under the Convention on Biological Diversity, and (4) how Japan's policy framework supports biodiversity recovery. Aspirants should link this case to concepts such as the IUCN Red List, ecosystem services, and the challenges of post-release monitoring.
