Image 2 (Pexels):

Summary:

Birds move up and down mountains primarily for food, and not to track temperature as previously thought, according to a new study. But how does this knowledge inform conservation management?

Detailed analysis:

The study shifts focus from temperature-driven migration to food-resource efficiency. For environmental policy questions, emphasize habitat preservation at different altitudes, climate-resilient corridors, and the role of energy budgets in wildlife management.

Image 2 (Pexels):

Summary:

“The sighting marks the first recorded re-sighting of a tagged bird on Narcondam,” said the former assistant director of the Bombay Natural History Society

Detailed analysis:

The rare re-sighting underlines the importance of trans-hemispheric migratory routes and tagging programs. For exam prep, link this to biodiversity conservation, international treaties like CMS, and the need for monitoring remote habitats.
